Abstract

The invention describes a method of detecting welding process voltage, whereby the welding process voltage between a welding torch (10) and a workpiece (16) is detected and the welding process voltage is calculated in real time taking account of the interference variables of a welding system, in particular an inductance and a resistance.

Use Fig. 1 for abstract.